

As a flight attendant for a major airline, I implore you to not allow the use of cell phones on airplanes for the full duration of a flight. I can't imagine having to play the role of "cell phone police" in addition to my other duties. We have a hard enough time at 30k feet with "seatback rage", "alcoholics" and having to police for terrorist. I do not need to be needlessly distracted from my safety duties by being brought in to police some irate customer screaming into a cell phone to his or her spouse or office. Look at the quiet cars on Amtrack. They are very much in demand. Please pursue other uses of communication which would be much more effective and less evasive. I would suggest the use of email or online chat as opposed to cell phones. Cell phone use on airplanes would be the worst thing for airlines next to allowing smoking again. thank you.
